INSTRUCTORS

- Captain Anne McGrath, NJSPB Sex Offender Management Unit
- Captain Steven Tallard, NJSPB Sex Offender Management Unit

CURRICULUM

- Actual case studies that illustrate how sexual predators seek victims, including:
 - Unexpected ways offenders have succeeded in tracking and luring young victims via the Internet
 - Dangers of sexual abuse by relatives of young children
 - Use of date rape drugs and other forms of coercion
- Statistics and clinical data to dispel myths about sex offenders, and provide a real picture of the risks, sexual predators' typical offense cycle, and common relationships between abusers and victims
- Important advice for parents, teachers, law enforcement and teens about Internet safety, safety with strangers and safety with family members
- Visual demonstrations of the GPS tracking devices and polygraph equipment the State Parole Board uses in its supervision of 6,600 convicted sex offenders statewide
